Columbia College, Chicago

Isaiah Moore is an ever-changing individual who is committed to making the world a better place through social justice and civic engagement. Currently, as the Co-President of Black Student Union at Columbia College Chicago, Isaiah devotes his time to enhancing the community around him through direct volunteer work and initiatives. His focus on community enhancement found its roots prior to college. Not surprisingly, Moore was awarded a Certificate of Accomplishment from the Princeton Prize in Race Relations for his promotion of harmony, understanding, and respect among people of different races. The Princeton Prize in Race Relations recognizes and rewards high school students who have had a significant positive effect on race relations in their schools or communities through their volunteer efforts.

SGAP Leaders: Idea Challenge Workshop

Isaiah was an engaged participant in the SGAP Leaders' Idea Challenge Workshop as one of 94 high school students. During the one-day challenge, students work in small mixed-school groups, facilitated by college students and faculty, to develop their own idea for a start-up social enterprise and present it to a panel of experienced social entrepreneurs. Students may choose to continue working on their idea after the workshop, then submit it as part of the Social Venture category of a High School Business Ideas Competition Awards event. The competition is an exciting process that grants up to $500 in cash awards to winners.

SGAP Leaders

We engage and empower the youth of our generation to think critically about the real-world, environmental and societal problems of our time, and to devise creative, community-based solutions to tackle them, so that they may become change agents in their communities and in turn, the world.
